ANCOM REGULATION

Candidates who do not have Romanian citizenship do not identify themselves for radio operator certificate examinations using the identity card from their country of origin. Within the EU, the identity card is an identity document by which the holder can identify themselves in other countries when traveling (thus replacing the passport, which is a travel document by definition, recognized internationally). However, this is only a facilitation of free movement within the EU. Participating in an examination in another country and obtaining a document issued under public authority by the authorities of a country other than the country of origin, based on passing that examination, is something else. In this context, identification with a passport at the examination (see point c) below) has the status of an exception.

There are three identification situations at examinations for candidates who do not have Romanian citizenship: a) citizens from EU/EEA/Switzerland countries who have residency in Romania identify themselves with the registration certificate, residence card, or permanent residence card; these candidates have CNP numbers (Personal Numerical Code) granted by the Romanian authorities starting with 7 or 8, which will be entered in the annex of the examination report, b) citizens from non-EU countries who have residency in Romania identify themselves with the temporary residence permit, long-term residence permit, EU Blue Card, or single permit; these candidates have CNP numbers granted by the Romanian authorities starting with 7 or 8, which will be entered in the annex of the examination report, c) foreign citizens who do not fall into any of the situations provided for in points a) or b) identify themselves with the passport issued by the country of origin; in this case, instead of the CNP, a unique code of 18 alphanumeric characters (starting with the three-letter code associated with the country of origin), located on the last line of the passport page where the holder's photo appears, is entered in the annex of the examination report.

The examination center retains a copy of the documents provided for in points a)-c), as applicable (instead of the copy of the identity card, in the case of Romanian citizens), and presents them to ANCOM as annexes to the examination reports. Furthermore, candidates in the situation described in points a) or b) do not identify themselves at the examination with a passport but, obligatorily, with one of the documents listed above. Therefore, the examination center must undertake all necessary due diligence to ascertain the exact status of the candidate. ANCOM recommends the use of self-responsibility declarations to this effect.
